A Total Solution for Developing A Remote Workforce

Both the Virtual Worker Assessment and the Virtual Worker Survival Skills can go hand-in-hand for developing your remote workers.

The Virtual Worker Assessment checks how employees can fare in a remote work setting. Employees receive a low rating on the assessment when they are not proficient at one of the following corresponding dimensions: preferences, skills or attributes. Managers can focus their attention on helping the employee develop those specific areas with the Virtual Worker Survival Skills course. Here's how the two solutions work together:

Assessment

When an employee or job candidate has a low score on Preferences, typically they prefer a great deal of supervision and may have trouble prioritizing tasks.

When someone has a low score on Skills, typically they lack communication and technology skills ideal for a remote setting.

When someone has a low score on Attributes, typically they are less organized and be more easily distracted.

Course

The Planning Your Day Module along with Managing Distractions and Interruptions Module provide information on creating an action plan for successfully accomplishing tasks in a timely manner. Plans can be shared with the manager for accountability.

The Benefits and Challenges Module along with Optimizing Your Workspace and Building Trusting Relationships Modules provide information to overcome the barriers associated with virtual communication and obtaining success by keeping technology simple.

Planning Your Day and Optimizing Your Workspace Modules will set a path for success through organization and avoiding busy areas of your home. The Benefits and Challenges Module along with Making the Transition Module will help recognize and develop action plans on building confidence and responding positively to change. And, the Managing Distractions and Interruptions Module will provide assistance maintaining focus.
