The Dos & Don'ts: Remote Video Production

Do: Film in Landscape Mode (your video should be wide, not tall). Make sure your video resolution is set to 1920 x 1080 if possible.

Do: Wear a wireless headset or earbuds that have a microphone (like airpods). Using these while recording will produce higher quality audio.

Do: Record in a quiet space. Try to pick a room where you can close the door and avoid any noise coming from family members or pets. If you're outside, make sure you're protected from any wind and recording with an external microphone like a headset or airpod becomes very important.

Do: Make sure that you are centered in the frame. You should aim to have space visible in-frame on all sides of you in the video. Above your head and on either side of you, and use that space to center yourself.

Don't: Record with light sources visible behind you. Visible light sources such as windows, lamps, overhead lights, can all negatively affect the lighting in your video when they're behind you. Try to use those lights in front of you instead, and they will positively impact your lighting instead.

Don't: Immediately start talking when you press record, and don't immediately move forward to stop recording at the end. Give about two seconds at the start and end where you simply smile at the camera, and then start/end.

Do: De-clutter the area behind you, if necessary. Picking a spot in your office or living room is fine, and having some character like wall-decorations or a bookshelf is great, but a cluttered desk or floor takes focus away from you in the video.
